During these two years the student is expected to translate from and into French orally and in writing; he is also expected to write short essays in French on topics suggested by and arising out of the plots and the characters in the set texts, or the biography of the authors. The text-books will be taken from the French Classics in prose and in verse, but poetry of an abstruse or philosophical nature will not be set.

The student will be expected to know the outlines of the history of French literature, and also the elements of French prosody if one of his texts is in verse. Passages especially in unseen translation, will be of such a length and standard of difficulty as can reasonably be translated and written in the allotted time by candidates to whom French is a foreign language.
